

1973 Dodge Charger Sunroof Cars

By: Scott Rudge – moparsunroofregistry@gmail.com

The 1973 manual sunroof B-bodies were much more plentiful than their power sunroof predecessors. American Sunroof Corporation (ASC) started producing sunroof kits for the Chrysler Corporation, so the option could be installed right on the assembly line, instead of pulling the cars off the line into a side room or shipping them to a nearby ASC facility. With the sunroof installation streamlined, and the change to a manual crank operation, the price of the sunroof option was essentially cut in half. This made the manual sunroof a more attractive option for the dealers and customers to order. The 1973 Dodge Charger sunroof cars that have been submitted to the Registry, and cars that I have come across on the web, are listed on the following pages.

The manual sunroof production numbers below are based on numbers from Galen Govier's 1972-1974 "White Book", a small pocket book produced by Galen's Tag Service that contains a wealth of information on decoding VIN numbers, fender tag codes, and provides production numbers for the various models of 1972-1974 Chrysler, Dodge, and Plymouth cars. These production numbers are, in turn, calculated from an internal Chrysler "Options & Accessories (O&A)" report. A comprehensive O&A report was usually produced in August each year to show installation rates of all the different options and accessories available on the previous year's models. The installation rates were in percent form, and rounded to the closest tenth of a percent. Due to the rounding of these installation rates, these production numbers are not a hard fast number, but a close approximation to the actual number of cars produced with said option. True production numbers for Chrysler options are considered "Unobtainium" at this time.

Manual sunroof cars shipped to the US market: Approximately 3,097.
